_____ A virtue that empowers us to respect the dignity of our bodies and God’s design for sexuality in how we dress, speak, and act. It expresses the reality that our goodness and beauty don’t come from getting attention with our appearance or outward behavior but from being loved by God and from being ourselves the way he made us to be.

_____ The experience of Adam and Eve after the Fall, and all of us since then, fearing others as a threat to our dignity. At the same time, it reminds us to recognize and protect our value.

_____ A virtue that empowers us to love ourselves and others rightly through the language of our bodies. It means living our sexuality in the way that tells the truth about our identity, vocation, and relationships throughout our lives; it also means striving for purity of mind, heart, and body. It is a virtue for everyone in all vocations.

_____ A vice that sees people as objects to be used rather than persons to be loved. It damages our understanding of our true identity.

_____ The unique, different characteristics of maleness and femaleness created by God as a gift to bring out the best in each other and call us to communion and self-gift.

_____ Refraining from something, such as abstaining from meat on Fridays in Lent. Abstinence in relationships is a necessary part of chastity for unmarried people, but abstinence by itself is not the same as chastity.
